PREDING FOR MILK.

[From the Western Rural.]

That certain cows have the ability to produce an extra quality of milk cannot be doubted. But breed alone is not sufficient. Unless we appreciate the fact that milk is made of the food taken into the atomach, we make a fundamental mistake. Yet this error is not uncommonly entertained. This among ether ways, is shown by the question, which is sometimes put to us, Does food flavor the milk? We have heard that question argued with a great deal of vigor on both sides, and with the knowledge, too, that such things as turnips, if fed too generously, will impart favor to the milk, which must necessarily partake, in a large measure, of the character of the food. If the food is poor the milk must be poor, and if the food is poor the milk must be poor, and if the food is poor the milk must be poor, and if the food is poor the milk will be rich, something, as we have before said, depending npon the cow herself. By special feeding both the quality and quantity of the milk can be improved. A very great deal more depends upon feeding than the most of us imagine. A breed, or a variation of a breed, can be largely made principally or partly from feeding. For instance, we begin to feed especially for milk. The animal thus fed is used for breeding purposes, and the off-spring in time is used for breeding. Now there is no question that in time the feeding and the selection will show strong milking characteristics in the descendants of the original animal. Darwin refers to many cases of this character, and some of our American writers give instances of a similar character. One of whom we now think cites the case of twey ordinary milker that produced helfer calves which were also nothing but very ordinary milkers. The cow after a while was fed specially for milk, and beside becoming a good milker herself produced helfer calves which were also nothing but very ordinary milkers. The cow after a while was fed specially for milk, and beside becoming a good milker herself produced helfer calves which were a to injure the animal is kept properly utilizes it, and judicious feeding will usure that the system gets nothing of any nore than it can utilize.

END OF MAHONEISM.

(From the K. C. Times.] Mahoneism has run its course. The means by which the republican party hoped to divide the democrats of the south have been ignominiously defeated. The democrats of Virginia had scarcely any hope of success, but the principles that were at work at the electhe principles that were at work at the elections last Movember were at work in the readjester state. There can be no doubt but that the unholy siliance between the government and Mishone contributed not a little to the diagnat and contempt of the people for republican methods, and influenced many a vote cast by honest republicans who could not sustain a party that boldly and unblushingly bought politicians in the open markst.

The November elections have now reacted on Virginia in the defeat of the little boss and the vanishing away of the pet scheme of the republican managers to divide the south and rule. If must be cold comfort to Mahone to see with what evident satisfaction his defeat is regarded by many republican papers north. He was always a heavy load to carry, still the party could not quarrel with him and retain the control of the senate. He has now been squelched by the people of Virginia them-salves, whe in an evil hour gave him the ascendency.

All the old republican methods of success.

candsacy.

At the old republican methods of success have fallen into ruin. They have gone to pieces from their own rottenness. Their party leaders are at hopeless variance. The patranage of the federal government is no longer the potent engine that it was. They are barren of resources and must be hopelessly beaten.

THE LABORS OF AN EDITOR.

The London Times, speaking of an editor's labor says it can only be appreciated by those who have had the fortune to have some experience in it. The merest slip of a pen, an epithet too much, a wrong date, a name misspelt, or with a wrong initial before it, the misinterpretation of some passage, perhaps accapable of interpretation, the most triging offense to the personal or national susceptibility of those who do not even profess to care for the feelings of others, may prove not only disagreeable, but costly mistakes; but they are about the least of the mistakes to which the editor is lable. The editor must be on the spot until the paper is sent to the press, and make decisions on which not only the approval of the public but even great causes may hang. He cannot husband his strength with comparative repose in the solitude of a study, or the freshness of green fields. He must see the world, converse with this forement or busiest actors, be open for information, and on guard against error. All this should be borne in mind by those who complain that journalism is not infallibly accurate, just and agreeable.

COLORADO LEGISLATORS.

If Tabor's old partner, Bush, does not wrong them in his sworn statement, Colorado legislators are very "cheap trück" indeed. He says he took a contract to elect Tabor to the senate for $5,000, and by getting votes as low as $5 each, elected him at a total cost of only $1,500, thereby clearing $3,500 on the contract. But as Mr. Bush took the contract to rid Tabor of his old wife and supply him with a new one for $10,000, and, as it is known that the operation cost thirty or forty times that sum, it may be that Tabor did not do all his buying in the other case through Bush. We are not prepared to believe that a whole Legislature is such an inexpensive triffe, compared with a "Bashy Doe." as Mr. Bush would make out. The solons should rise up and show that the market price of their virtue has been misrepresented.

AN URFORTUNATE CADET.

An unfortunate naval cadet at Annappolis has been studying the history of the United States Navy under Robeson and Chandler, and his studies produced so deep an impression on his mind that he became a confirmed and helpless kleptomaniac. He would fancy that the water-chains and trinkets of his comrades were ship chains and cables, and he was about to steal the tin roof unit, and he was about to steal the tin roof unit, and he was about to steal the tin roof

SUPERIORITY OF ART OVER NA-TURE. (From the Boston Transcript.)

The women folks are wearing artificial bugs and spiders as ornaments. This shows the superiority of art over nature. One real bug or true spider would set a woman into convulsions; but such is the ameliorating effect of art that she will walk about with a dozen or more crawling all over her and never so much as wince.
